Berlin – The SicherheitsExpo Berlin is already experiencing great demand ahead of its premiere: around 70 exhibitors are expected at the first event on 17 and 18 September at the STATION Berlin event location. The programme covers all areas of security technology, such as access control, video surveillance, fire protection, perimeter protection and IT security. One focus will be on video surveillance, an area in which there are numerous technical innovations. Berlin Police Commissioner Barbara Slowik Meisel will be the patron of SicherheitsExpo Berlin, emphasising the relevance of the new event in the German capital.

Future-oriented security technologies will be demonstrated and discussed in the high-calibre SicherheitsExpo Forum on both days of the event. Participation in the presentations is free of charge for all trade fair visitors. In addition, the renowned fire protection symposium, chaired by the well-known fire protection expert Dr Wolfgang Friedl, will take place as part of SicherheitsExpo Berlin. The combination of both event formats creates numerous synergies for visitors and participants.

Visitors to SicherheitsExpo come from a wide variety of sectors, such as corporate security, plant security, fire protection, insurance, authorities, police and fire brigades, as well as architects, security consultants and IT managers. One topic that is currently highly relevant is the protection of critical infrastructures. As a renowned industry event, SicherheitsExpo provides information and offers on current security topics. The aim of the trade fair is to demonstrate technologies that protect companies, private individuals and the public sector from criminal attacks from inside and outside: Industrial plants, banks, clinics, transport companies, retail, railway stations, airports, museums, private individuals and public authorities.
